PRODUCT PROFILE

Prince Explorer gin is distilled in a 19th century copper still, like a traditional 'London Dry Gin', using a base of carefully selected and sorted classic botanicals. Additional botanicals, at the core of Prince Explorer's uniqueness, are then infused into the spirit. In a process approaching that of scientific discovery, it is above all in this step that the mastery of our artisan distillers shines through.

The value of time and care is irreplaceable. For example, most only infuse pink peppercorns for 15 days, extracting exclusively peppery notes. Our master distillers have found that only after a lengthy infusion process of 45 days does this botanical reveal additional hints of sweet vanilla.

Our delicate distillation process is centred on authentic revelation and minimal processing of these botanicals. This is why Prince Explorer gin is bottled unfiltered. We believe that flavours and mouthfeel can be lost during filtration — we seek to preserve those naturally arising long-chain molecules to maintain the richness and roundness of our spirit.

TASTING NOTES

TOP: The first expedition begins with top notes of juniper and pink pepper, helping anchor the complex olfactory signature of this gin from the outset. As if transported by a warm summer breeze through a citrus grove on the shores of the Mediterranean, subtle hints of mandarin then slowly drift in.

BODY: Upon first sip, the body is fresh and slightly sweet. Touches of Nadorcott mandarin mingle with herbaceous notes of Siberian Angelica and subtle hints of Canadian Elderflower, balancing sweetness and acidity. Warm hints of pepper balance the body and accentuate the enjoyable complexity of this spirit.

BASE: The voyage comes to a lingering end, rounded out by a warm and enduring base punctuated by Sichuan pepper and cardamom. At this last port, hints of thyme, reminiscent of walks in the Garrigue, mingle with pink peppercorns, now expressing their full complexity and revealing sweet notes of vanilla.
